WHY IS DIABETES FATAL IF LEFT UNTREATED?

In this disease, the glucose level in the blood are not controlled adequately. In particular, glucose level become elevated from normal concentrations, leading to the excretion of this key energy source in the urine. More importantly, cells cannot make use of the increased amounts of glucose in the blood and so energy generation pathways cannot operate properly. As glucose is the only energy source that can be used by nerve cells, the brain function is severely impaired. The lack of glucose within the cells then leads to increased metabolism of fatty acids and the molecules that are used to make cell membranes, resulting in the formation of “ketone bodies” which decrease the acidity of the blood. In turn, the kidney excretes the excess acid but in so doing, essential minerals like sodium, potassium and phosphate ions are also from the body. Excretion of these materials requires large volumes of water and for this and a number of other reasons, the blood volume become severely
